WHAT

GPPAC Northeast Asia and AFSC are collaborating to develop a simulation of Peace Games for the region, and seeking participants to join an initial pilot session!

The Ulaanbaatar Dialogue Simulation will give participants a chance to practise and hone their understanding of international diplomacy, introducing participants to challenges in Northeast Asia and guiding toward possible solutions. Participants can expect to receive a packet of information in advance with the overall scenario, flow of the day, the particular role assigned to each person, and general information about the context. The pilot session will also include a feedback session where participants will shape the simulation moving forward.

WHY

Discourse and tabletop exercises in Northeast Asia generally start with a negative event and play out the consequences of such an event. What if this was changed, flipped around, to analyze the opportunities presented by something positive happening? What might be possible with a modest breakthrough and agreement? Building off the work of others who have crafted simulations for the Korean Peninsula, AFSC and GPPAC will pilot a simulation informed by the particular viewpoints of civil society. Today's programme will be a first step to developing an ongoing project which can be reproduced and held in different contexts including universities, civil society gatherings and more.
